Course Description

This course will introduce students to some of the main theoretical approaches and issues in socio-legal studies. The course is divided into three parts. After beginning with a discussion of what the law is, Part I will cover different philosophical texts and the evolution of legal philosophy from natural law, to legal positivism and legal realism. Part II will examine contemporary approaches to the study of law and society, including classical sociological approaches as well as critical legal studies, feminist legal theories, critical race theory, and aboriginal legal theory. Part III will move from theory to a discussion of the structures and processes of the legal system and the interaction between law and society at large. This part of the course will look at the concept of the rule of law, the civil and common law traditions, constitutionalism and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, criminal law as social control, and law as a tool of social transformation.

Objectives of the Course

By the end of the course, students should be able to critically evaluate legal, philosophical, and theoretical texts as well as understand the way in which law, politics and society influence each other and how the law in Canada is made and reformed over time.

Ethics

Whenever you perform research with human participants (i.e. surveys, interviews, observation) as part of your university studies, you are responsible for following university research ethics guidelines. Your instructor must review and approve of your research plans and supervise your research. For more information about your research ethics responsibilities, see <http://arts.ucalgary.ca/research/for-researchers/ethics>. This course does not include work with human subjects.

Plagiarism

Using any source whatsoever without clearly documenting it is a serious academic offense. Consequences include failure on the assignment, failure in the course and possibly suspension or expulsion from the university.

You must document not only direct quotations but also paraphrases and ideas where they appear in your text. A reference list at the end is insufficient by itself. Readers must be able to tell exactly where your words and ideas end and other people's words and ideas begin. This includes assignments submitted in non-traditional formats such as Web pages or visual media, and material taken from such sources.

Please consult your instructor if you have any questions regarding how to document sources.

Internet and electronic communication device information

Computers and other electronic devices may be used for class-related purposes. Talking on the phone, texting, and accessing websites unrelated to the course is not permitted, as it is distracting and disrespectful to the instructor and other students..

Policy on Recording of Lectures

Recording shall be permitted for individual private study only at the discretion of the instructor. For any other use, whether by duplication, transcription, publication, sale or transfer of recordings, written approval must be obtained from the instructor for the specific use proposed. Any other use of recordings constitutes academic misconduct and may result in suspension or expulsion. For more information on recording of lectures please see: <http://www.ucalgary.ca/pubs/calendar/current/e-6.html>

Academic Misconduct

For information on academic misconduct and the consequences thereof please see the current University of Calgary Calendar at the following link;
