Course Description

This course examines the concepts of rights and freedoms in the liberal tradition, beginning with J.S. Mill and other early writers and moving on to discuss the critiques and new directions that have been put forward by more recent scholars. We examine the implications of these theories for contemporary socio-legal problems around such issues as expression, religion and multiculturalism.

Objectives of the Course

Students are to gain a detailed understanding of liberalism and its workings in Canada, with some comparisons to other jurisdictions. They will enhance their analytical skills and craft thoughtful, coherent, creative arguments about liberalism and its real-world manifestations.

Textbooks and Readings:

The majority of readings will be provided in a list on Blackboard with electronic links. Students may individually print off the materials to bring to class.

The following books will be used:

Ethics

Whenever you perform research with human participants (i.e. surveys, interviews, observation) as part of your university studies, you are responsible for following university research ethics guidelines. Your instructor must review and approve of your research plans and supervise your research. For more information about your research ethics responsibilities, see <http://arts.ucalgary.ca/research/for-researchers/ethics>.

Plagiarism

Using any source whatsoever without clearly documenting it is a serious academic offense. Consequences include failure on the assignment, failure in the course and possibly suspension or expulsion from the university.

You must document not only direct quotations but also paraphrases and ideas where they appear in your text. A reference list at the end is insufficient by itself. Readers must be able to tell exactly where your words and ideas end and other people's words and ideas begin. This includes assignments submitted in non-traditional formats such as Web pages or visual media, and material taken from such sources.

Please consult your instructor if you have any questions regarding how to document sources.

Internet and electronic communication device information

Use of internet and cell phones during class is strongly discouraged. All electronics are not allowed during examinations, including the open book midterm examination.
